representation. And media studies itself is, in an obvious sense, concerned in part with the variety of different texts, in my instance, visual texts: representations which are transmitted by the media. But Iâ€™m going to stand back from that a bit to begin with and try and look at the process of representation itself.

At this stage you should get a basic understanding of the wave model of light, which involves the idea of light as a complex superposition of many component waves, or elementary waves, each with its own wavelength, frequency, amplitude and phase. You should be able to explain these ideas to yourself and to others.

White light can be divided into different colours, each one defined by a range of wavelengths. That light reflected or projected by objects is of a certain wavelength amount that is caught by the eyes, and interpreted by the brain as a defined colour. The specific part of the eye that sifts the light is the retina.
